Pruning Young Trees: A Hands-On Workshop

Thursday,
September 28, 2017
(raindate Thursday, October 5th)

8:00 am at Bushnell
Park in Hartford

Pruning Young Trees

Poor form and structure are a major contributor to the potential hazards of mature trees on public and private lands. Pruning trees while young gives managers the opportunity to reduce the chances of that tree becoming problematic in the future. Some objectives of young tree pruning include: correcting poor branching structure, preventing and correcting codominant stems, improving clearance or aesthetics, and encouraging the growth of a central leader.

This workshop will cover the basics of tree physiology and the importance of good structure for tree sustainability. Hands-on instruction will be given on making correct pruning cuts and how to avoid improper cuts. Attendees will have a chance to get their hands dirty and participate in pruning some of the young trees at Bushnell Park. The workshop will conclude with an optional tree walk around the park led by CT DEEP's Chris Donnelly.

Come learn why pruning young trees is important, how to determine pruning objectives based on species and other factors, and how to correctly prune!
